

Dawn Landes is an American singer-songwriter and musician originally from Louisville, Kentucky. As a recording artist she has released three full-length albums and toured extensively in the US, Europe and around the world. Performing solo and with her trio, Landes has often shared the stage with artists like Ray Lamontagne, Feist, Andrew Bird and Suzanne Vega. In the studio, she has collaborated with songwriters such as Justin Townes Earle, Will Oldham and Josh Ritter.

Her songs have been featured in popular films and TV shows including Bored to Death, Skins, House, Gossip Girl and United States of Tara. She composed original scores for two feature films Blackbird and Familiar Strangers and wrote the end credit song for Savage Grace starring Julianne Moore.

Landes has appeared with The American Songbook Series, The Boston Pops and in 2012 with the NYC Ballet at Lincoln Center singing a ballet entitled "The Brown Girl" as part of composer Nico Muhly's score. A skilled producer and engineer, she has worked at Stratosphere Sound in New York City and at Philip Glass' own personal recording studio. In 2009 Landes helped found Saltlands Studio in Brooklyn, NY.
